The First Sheet Lula Rivera
Join Lil Swann and her tell-it-like-it-is girlfriends every Wednesday for coffee at Hot's UndertheMoon Café in Homewood, Alabama, just beneath the iron Vulcan's statuesque butt. The late-20-somethings have married and are starting their families--all but Lil. The imaginary script she crafted for her life way back in middle school isn't panning out. Her friends are beyond ready for her to ditch the fairy tale and step into the sexy, new millennium. Even Lil is ready to admit they are right. She is out of patience, and with her twenty-sixth birthday approaching, feels like she's running out of time. For Lil, the revised script with new choices starts with a fresh pack of college-ruled notebook paper, a sharpened number two pencil, and a decision-making list of do's and don'ts pressed into the first sheet. Lil's story is a universal one, spanning place and cultures. The action moves from the noise and voices of city life to a simpler, quieter place where the coffee tastes even better.
