When the chorus came along, "Back it up pon the dumper truck" Bert mouth start to spring water. The bass in the beat pounded so nice, 'Bap, bap!' it moved Bert every time it chipped in. "TELL MI SEH YOU LUCKY MEK MI GET BACK MI VISA' The loudest of volume frightening Marj she thought she was about to have an accident, Poor Marj shouted overly terrified from the stabbing blast of the radio, "Turn that down Bert, we are going to a place of God. A place of praise and worship. We can't blast Kartel 'Cock It Up Pon Di Dumper Truck!'" Before answering her, Bert made the sound of the bass when it chipped in the rhythm, 'Bap, bap!' And he moved his shoulders to the 'Bap, bap!' " Turn it DOWN!" "Marj weh you a get suh bringle fah? A just likkle music enuh." He unbuckled his seatbelt, got out his seat, turned around, his small bottom facing the windscreen and start to jiggle him bottom like Miley Cyrus. "Bert turn it DOWN! I can't concentrate. And sit down in the chair! STOP IT!" While Marj was driving, Bert was trying his best to balance on his headtop in his grey office-suit but the tie kept hitting him in his eye. "Bert stop it this instance! Suppose you drop out of the car?!" Marj slapped him across his belly and turned off the radio completely. She felt exhausted. Not physically, mentally. And even greater emotionally. Still balanced on his headtop Bert said "Marj don't slap mi when mi a do mi antics. Weh you a put your hand pon mi fah?" Bert was way more than she now believe she can manage. He climbed down from his headtop stance and said, "Bwoy Marj you know how fi bruck people vibes eeh….Hsst." He set his tie properly down on his chest. "Bert please I'm begging you, please, don't embarrass me when we at the church." For some reason Marj seemed to almost be crying, she knew she couldn't ever stand for Bert to embarrass her in front everyone at church. "Embarrass you like do what, Marj?"
