Academic practices face different challenges than private group practices. Your physicians are spending time with patients as well as teaching students and residents and conducting research. Your production data don't compare well with private practices. And your compensation structures are also distinct. That's why you need to compare your data with more relevant benchmarks those of other academic practices. MGMA s annual Academic Practice Compensation and Production Survey for Faculty and Management Report helps you analyze critical relationships between compensation and performance; provides broad data that encompass physician and nonphysician faculty and management; and gives you a valuable resource for continued success in an increasingly complex workplace. By simultaneously focusing on the quality and efficiency of care, you can make confident decisions that positively boost academic practice performance. We put it together. - Complete data on more than 15,000 faculty physicians and nonphysician providers and more than 1,800 managers in more than 500 medical departments - Data categorized by specialty, rank, geographic region and more - Management compensation by department and individual characteristics - Key medical department performance indicators You put it to use.TM - Evaluate the performance of individual faculty physicians and nonphysician providers - Develop compensation and production targets for your providers and managers - Assess your compensation methods for compliance 2007, ISBN: 978-1-56829-203-8 MGMA, the leader in medical practice management data for more than 50 years.
